Gestures may mean (1) different things in different cultures. For example, in the (2) United States you give a handshake only to business partners. In (3) France, (4) Italy and (5) Spain you kiss both cheeks. In (6) North Macedonia (7) Switzerland and (8) Slovenia you give three kisses to your friends. In Korea and Japan, people greet with a (9) bow. A nod with your head is (10) informal and common among friends in Asia. In the United States they start counting with the (11) index finger and end with a (12) thumb. In (13) Iran, they begin counting with the pinkie. In Europe, we start counting with the (14) thumb and finish with the (15) pinkie. We also start counting with closed (16) fingers, but in (17) Japan, they count with their fingers open.

Your amazing heart

1 ²⁷ Listen and read. Then match. Poslušaj in beri. Nato poveži.

1 Do you know that you have a very powerful muscle in your body? It's so powerful that it could lift a car! Can you guess which one it is? It's your heart, of course. It's not very big, it's about the size of your fist and you can find it in the centre of your chest.

3 Your heart brings oxygen to your cells. You have about 4 litres of blood in your body. Your blood makes more than 1000 round-trips through your body every day and your heart pumps more than 7,500 litres of blood – this is more than 95,000 km every day – more than two trips around the world!

2 Your heart's job is to push blood around your body. It's like a pump – it fills with blood and then squeezes it out – this is your heartbeat. Your heart beats over 100,000 times a day or over two billion times in your life. Your heartbeat keeps you alive. Your heart beats faster when you move because your body needs more oxygen.

4 If you want to make your heart stronger, you have to use it as much as possible. You can run, cycle, swim, jump or do any other exercise, where your heart beats faster than normal. Your heart also grows when you exercise, so it is even more powerful.

Glossary
